ENDNOTES:

1. Section 226.650, RSMo, which became law in 1965, requires MHTC and MoDOT to regulate junkyards on areas adjacent to the interstate and primary systems of highways in Missouri. This law remains unchanged. Federal law was amended in 2012 to only require the regulation of junkyards on the National Highway System, which consists of interstate highways, but not all primary highways in Missouri.

2. This rule defines the primary use test for the Commission to determine if the real property on which the billboard is located is commercial/industrial. The primary use test is not required under the federal/state agreement. Also, federal regulations do not contain maximum brightness/luminance requirements for a digital billboard, or how long a digital billboard message must remain on the sign face before it may change to display a new message. This state rule, in contrast, sets maximum luminance level of 300 candelas per square meter for the digital billboard and the static display time for each message on a digital billboard is set at 8 seconds.

3. The federal regulations establish high-level criteria which a state rule must meet. However, the federal rules are not detailed enough to administer the signing programs. As a result, each state is required to customize each sign program rule to the conditions found within the state.

4. There has been MoDOT discussions with interested stakeholders about changing state law to require certification of ignition interlock device manufacturers, in addition to the devices.
